In September 2012 the Dialog polling center took a poll of 503 Jewish Israelis in Tel Aviv. Commissioned by the Yisraela Goldblum Fund, they sought to determine public opinion on several key issues. Upon the release of the data, a firestorm of criticism, accusations, and introspection swept across Israel.

The following statistics accurately reflect the climate of racism in Israel.

42% don't want an Arab child to be in their children's class (only 49% do not care)

- 33% of Israeli Jews favor legally blocking Israeli Arab citizens from voting for the Knesset (59% against)
- 36% support the transfer of Israeli Arab lands to the Palestinian Authority in exchange for settlements (48% are against transferring Israeli land)

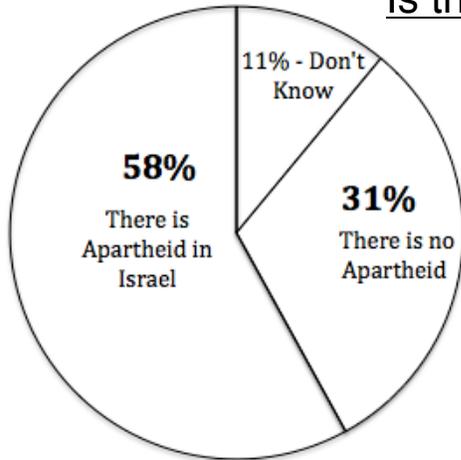

47% want to transfer part of the Israeli Arab population to the Palestinian Authority

- 59% are for official preference to be given to Jews for government positions (34% against)

- 42% do not want an Arab family as neighbors in their building (only 53% do not care)
- 50% believe that there is discrimination against Arabs in government jobs (29% do not believe so)

Is there Apartheid in Israel?

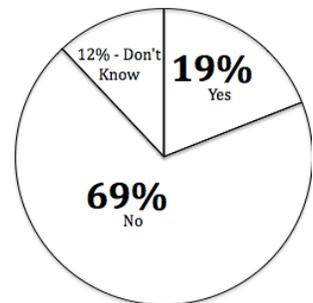

58% of Jewish Israelis believe that there is Apartheid in Israel

- 36% believe that the boycott on S. Africa contributed to end Apartheid (10% “definitely”, 26% “most likely”). 34% do not think that boycott had such a role (17% “most likely not”, 17% “definitely not”)

What do Jewish Israelis think about the Occupied Palestinian Territories?

- 74% support separation of Israelis and Palestinians on roads in the Occupied Territories. Only 17% call for an end to separation
- 38% support annexation of the territories where settlements have been constructed (basically, 70% of the occupied territories). Only 48% object to such annexation.

If Israel were to annex the West Bank, a substantial majority, 69% of the Jewish public, objects to allowing the 2.5 million Palestinians of the West Bank to vote.
